Course Summary

Description

Education Studies is a broad multi-disciplinary degree, designed for the intellectually and practically curious. From the philosophical foundations of schooling, to the political implications of policy, education is a vast field that has multiple avenues to approach a seemingly straightforward subject. Our degree programme goes far beyond any classroom and considers education, people and their relationship to the ever-changing world.

Course Structure

The breadth of our modules allows for the creation of pathways through the programme. This may be linked to one of the programmes four strands of educational expertise: pragmatic; sociological-philosophical; psychological; and international-intercultural education. You will also study modules in the Department of Sociology.

Core Modules include:

- Historical and Philosophical Ideas of Education
- Contemporary Issues and evidence in Education

A range of modules in Sociology such as:

- Societies in Transition
- Modern & Contemporary Sociological Theory

Educational Research Methods

Dissertation

Optional Modules available in previous years include:

- Higher Education: Issues of Inclusion and Exclusion
- Constructing Childhood and Youth
- Assessing Education
- Identity, Culture and Education
- Learning and Development in Childhood
- Wider Contexts of Education
- Disability and Educational Needs: Impairment, Empowerment and Education
- Disability and Education Needs: What’s so ‘Special’ about SEND?
- Education in a Global Age
- Understanding the Arts in Education
- Evidence and Educational Policy
- The Social Life of Education
• Learning Sciences

BA (Hons) Education Studies

The Education Studies degree is an excellent programme if you want to keep your options open. As well as opening up routes into teaching, the programme also qualifies you for careers in educational research, educational publishing, educational administration, policy or management, as well as a range of careers in the commercial or public sector.

Of those students who left in 2017:

- 97% are in employment or further study six months after graduating

Of those in employment:

- 92% are in graduate level employment
- Median salary £28,000

Since graduating I have been a Project Worker at Investing in Children, a children’s rights-based social enterprise, to help improve local services and trusts for children and young people. This involves working directly with children and young people as well as the service or trust involved, such as the Children and Families Trust Executive Board and NHS Paediatric Diabetes Team.

Students who have graduated from Education Studies in the past 5 years have taken positions as Journalists, Youth Workers, Archivists, Charity Development Officers, Publishers and Music Therapists as well as professional preparation and study as Social Workers, Teachers, Psychotherapists and Midwives.

In addition many students go on to further study within educational research. For example, a taught MA, or MA in Research Methods (Education), some have gone onto funded PhDs.

The programme is also an excellent preparation for a career in teaching at either primary or secondary level. Although the degree does not offer Qualified Teacher Status (QTS), you may be able to progress onto a one year Postgraduate Certificate in Education programme (PGCE). However, it is important to stress that you are not expected to teach, and this degree is in no way focused around the competencies of a teacher.

The BA Education Studies - Psychology programme is fully accredited by the British Psychological Society (BPS) (www.bps.org.uk/) and as such provides clear career paths into a number of professions including teaching and educational psychology. The BPS recognition ensures that students who wish to work in a field requiring memberships of the BPS are prepared and qualified to do so.
